Union members, pensioners, officials and guests joined together July 25 to commemorate the formal reopening of the hiring hall at 115 Third Street in Norfolk, Virginia. The ceremony (and luncheon) marked the culmination of a massive renovation that started last year. SIU Asst. VP Pat Vandegrift (above, right) oversaw the project, which met with very favorable reactions from the assembled guests. Pictured above, left, immediately after the ribbon-cutting portion of the ceremony are (from left) ITF Inspector Bobbi Shipley, Seafarers Trustee Tony Naccarato, SIU Port Agent Mario Torrey, Maersk VP Ed Hanley, retired SIU VP Kermett Mangram (who did the honors), Pastor O.L. Cromwell (rear), SIU Secretary-Treasurer Tom Orzechowski, SIU President David Heindel, Seafarers Plans Administrator Maggie Bowen and SIU Executive VP Augie Tellez.

President Biden on July 20 expressed strong support for the Jones Act and the overall U.S. maritime industry as he delivered keynote remarks at Philly Shipyard. The ceremony marked the start of construction on a first-of-its-kind offshore wind vessel being built for SIU-contracted Great Lakes Dredge and Dock. SIU President David Heindel met with Biden before the ceremony – and the union got a shout-out from the commander in chief during his speech. Philly Shipyard Event Underscores Administration’s Support of Maritime
In the very near future, Seafarers LOG readers will notice some changes to our official publication’s look. We are taking advantage of advancements in the printing industry to help improve our product while not appreciably adding to our cost. Our format won’t be radically different (slightly smaller in size) but I’m confident you’ll agree that the fresh look is an improvement. We’re not cutting back on the amount of content, either. Stay tuned.

We regularly examine our methods of communication, and I believe it still makes sense for us to produce a monthly publication. When and if that changes, we won’t hesitate to adjust accordingly. Meanwhile, for those who don’t know, we also have a solid online presence and we’ve offered a test-alert service for the last decade. In addition to our website (launched in 1997), we’re active on social media, including multi-platform posts every weekday and usually one day on the weekend. We also post every edition of the LOG online, going all the way back to the newspaper’s launch almost 85 years ago.

The printed page remains valuable and viable for the SIU in part because connectivity at sea is, shall we say, still evolving. There is no doubt it is improving, and both the union and our contracted operators are fully committed to maximizing availability. But there are technological limits (just as there are ashore) that result in stretches of no cell service or no Wi-Fi for both. That’s not to say that we’re not continuing the print publication and either or proposition, but, let’s face it, when your phone or tablet won’t connect, it’s good to have another option.

We also keep in touch with other unions about the most effective ways to stay in touch with rank-and-file members. What I’ve learned is that the organizations who abandoned their respective publications quickly regretted it. There may be an exception here or there, but the anecdotal evidence is solid. Similarly, the feedback we receive from the membership — across all age groups — strongly supports maintaining a periodical. Lastly and again for those who may not know, while the LOG first and foremost serves as a community newspaper, we also use it to spread the word to the outside world about your outstanding work, and about the union’s positions on maritime and workers’ rights. We do not skimp with our online efforts, but you can’t hand somebody a website. And if anyone doubts the effectiveness of direct mail, check your mailbox ahead of next month’s issue. When and if that changes, we won’t hesitate to adjust accordingly. Stay tuned. I’m excited about the LOG’s upcoming revamp and I welcome your feedback once you’ve seen the new look.

The SIU Turns 85

Next month marks 85 years since the Seafarers International Union received its charter. On a personal note, I am grateful to have been part of the organization for 50 of those years (and counting).

We have a proud history and a bright future. Our members are second to none when it comes to professionalism, efficiency and (in my view) community-mindedness. We have a world-class training center to keep up with the times. We have solid working relationships with our operators, and we have political strength that helps ensure support for the U.S. Merchant Marine from our national to the community level of government. I am proud to be your president and I’m excited to continue working on your behalf.

Biden Gives Shout-Out to SIU, Jones Act

With SIU President David Heindel seated near the podium, President Biden on July 20 offered supportive remarks about both the union and America’s offshore wind industry — and the Jones Act-compliant vessel, the vessel, which will place rocks on the seabed to secure the base for offshore wind turbines, is being constructed for contractors Great Lakes Dredge and Dock.

Heindel stated, “You do the job right, and long-term, we’re going to the Gulf…. Across the Delaware River in Paulsboro, New Jersey, workers are welding the steel foundation for another large-scale wind project. That’s going to create more than 3,000 good-paying jobs. A project like this won’t connect, it’s good to have another option. The president also said that his “Investing in America agenda is bringing our clean energy supply chains home. Since I took office, we’ve seen more than $16 billion in new offshore wind investments, including 18 offshore wind vessels, 12 manufacturing facilities, and 13 ports. Today, we announced the first-ever offshore wind sale in the Gulf of Mexico. We’re going to the Gulf….”

With hundreds of unionized workers in attendance, Biden noted that the SIU will provide shipboard manpower when the vessel is completed. He mentioned that several other unions will be involved in the ship’s construction.

He also stated, “Some folks may not know, there was a law in 1920 called the Jones Act that was passed. It says ships travelling between U.S. ports have to be American-built, American-owned and have American crews. There are some who are content to rely on ships built overseas, without American crews to operate them. Not so. Not so. Again, not on my watch.”

Heindel met with Biden before the ceremony. “I thanked the president for his support of the Jones Act and the U.S. Merchant Marine. I also thanked him for bringing good union jobs for the wind industry.”

Heindel stated, “During the ceremony, Biden talked about “the progress we’ve made building an economy from the middle out and the bottom up.”

Heindel also mentioned “built the middle class, and it changed the economic direction of this country.”

Turning his attention to recent job growth, Biden cited “over 13 million new jobs built across the country, and nearly half a million of them here in Pennsylvania just in the last two-and-a-half years. Eight hundred-thousand manufacturing jobs (created in the U.S.), 28,000 here in Pennsylvania alone in the last two-and-a-half years. That’s more jobs in two years than any president has created in a four-year term. Unemployment is below 4 percent — the longest stretch of unemployment below 4 percent in the last 50 years. We’re beginning to come back, folks. We can be because we’re giving workers a chance.”

The president also said that his “Investing in America agenda is bringing our clean energy supply chains home. Since I took office, we’ve seen more than $16 billion in new offshore wind investments, including 18 offshore wind vessels, 12 manufacturing facilities, and 13 ports. Today, we announced the first-ever offshore wind sale in the Gulf of Mexico.”

He added, “All this investment means good-paying jobs here at home. We’re making sure these new jobs come free and fair (and with the ability to join a union if you’re not already in one). I made a commitment that I’d be the most pro-union president in American history — and I’m keeping that promise.”

Expanding on that commitment, Biden said he routinely tells business leaders that “union workers are the best in the world…. You do the job right, and long-term it costs (management) less than non-union labor.”

Crowley Tug Artemis Signals New Jobs for Seafarers

Seafarers-contracted Crowley recently announced that it has entered into the company’s fourth long-term charter for its newest Tier IV ship assist tug, the Artemis, with SIU-contracted Brusco Tug & Barge. “The powerful, state-of-the-art vessel reinforces the company’s commitment to sustainability while providing high performance,” Crowley said in a news release.

According to Crowley, the 77-foot tug “will deliver 7,000 horsepower with a bollard pull of 96 tons using two Caterpillar Marine 3516 Tier IV-compliant engines, meeting U.S. Environmental Protection Agency emission standards. Artemis will also feature advanced technology to enhance maneuverability and provide operators with remote monitoring of its performance, making it highly efficient and versatile for various operations.”

“The Artemis will not only offer the most power for its size like its sister vessel Athena, it showcases our dedication to providing environmentally efficient services while maintaining the highest standards of performance and reliability,” said Paul Mauzy, vice president, Crowley Shipping. “We are grateful to continue collaborating with Brusco Tug & Barge and Diversified Marine to bring new vessels that advance the industry’s capabilities.”

The Artemis is slated to enter service later this year, serving Los Angeles and Long Beach with ship assist and escort.

“We are proud of our Hercules Class tugs and pleased to continue our partnership with Crowley and Brusco Tug & Barge,” said Frank Manning, president, Diversified Marine. “This will be the sixth DMI-built tug in Crowley’s fleet and the eleventh we have built for Brusco. Our company is based on relationships, and we are very thankful for the relationship we have with these forward-thinking operators.”

The SIU recently helped formally celebrate the addition of a new Jones Act vessel. Seafarers-contracted Pasha Hawaii on Aug. 9 hosted a christening ceremony in Oakland, California, for its containership MV Janet Marie. SIU President David Heindel was a featured speaker at the gathering; SIU Vice President West Coast Nick Marrone also attended, as did rank-and-file Seafarers.

As reported in the August LOG, the LNG-powered vessel was delivered July 11. In addition to the christening, the company also previously conducted smaller commemorations for the Janet Marie’s first calls on the ports of Long Beach, California, and Honolulu, Hawaii, respectively.

During the christening, Heindel underscored “the significance of brand-new, state-of-the-art, American-built tonnage entering the U.S. fleet and sailing with American mariners. This is truly something to celebrate.”

He saluted the company’s “incredible commitment to our Seafarers, to our flag, and to our national, economic and homeland security. I know that our members are doing great work aboard this fine new ship, and George (Pasha IV, company president and CEO), you can count on us to continue taking good care of your mother’s namesake and to assure the delivery of her cargo.”

Heindel also pointed out that “ships like the Janet Marie help our country maintain a pool of well-trained, reliable, U.S.-citizen seafarers who are available to work aboard military support ships as needed.”

The Janet Marie is the second of two new防护 Oha Class, 774-foot containerships built at AmFELS in Brownsville, Texas. The company’s first vessel in the class, the SIU-crewed MV George III, began service in August 2022, becoming the first LNG-powered ship to enter service on the Bay Area.

Pasha Hawaii is a subsidiary of the 76-year-old, third-generation, family-owned company The Pasha Group, whose roots were planted in the Bay Area in 1947. The George III and Janet Marie are named in honor of the late parents of George Pasha IV.

“These ships represent the legacy of my parents and the company they helped build from humble beginnings in San Francisco,” said George Pasha IV. “The success of our family business has always been based on ingenuity, striving for excellence and doing what is right for our customers and the communities where we live and work. Both George III and Janet Marie provide our customers with best-in-class vessels, while setting the standard for environmental stewardship when it comes to ship design and construction. Today is a very proud moment for the entire Pasha team and our family.”

Chris Connor, president and CEO of the American Association of Port Authorities and board member of The Pasha Group, served as encom for the christening ceremony. Connor was joined by guest speakers Danny Wan, executive director of the Port of Oakland, Oakland Deputy Mayor Kimberly Mayfield; Heindel; and Pasha IV. Pastor Michael Ryan and Sister Judy Ryan, of St. James Catholic Church in Seattle and siblings to the late Janet Marie Ryan Pasha, conducted a Catholic blessing, followed by a traditional Hawaiian blessing by Kahu (Pastor) Kordell Keckin of Honolulu. George Pasha IV’s sister, Mary Jane Pasha, served as the ship’s sponsor, overseeing the breaking of the champagne bottle.

The new tug will mean additional jobs for SIU boatmen on the West Coast.
At the Washington Port of Longview, American farmers, port workers, millers, mariners, and state and federal policymakers stood together Aug. 15 to commemorate the significant humanitarian shipment of 28,000 metric tons of American-grown wheat on the SIU-crewed Liberty Glory (Liberty Maritime) as part of the U.S. Agency for International Development’s (USAID) Food for Peace program. The shipment comes as Food for Peace is under intense pressure from lawmakers working to eliminate shipments of food produced by American farmers aimed at alleviating the worst hunger emergencies around the world.

SIU Vice President West Coast Nick Marrone and SIU Assistant Vice President Joe Vincenzo attended the event, as did rank-and-file Seafarers. "American-grown food has been the cornerstone of America’s foreign aid policy since Food for Peace was launched in the 1950s with crops like corn, sorghum, rice and wheat. The shipments represent an "unbroken chain of humanity" that stretches from America’s fertile fields to families facing an unprecedented crisis. During the last three years, the United States has donated more than one million tons of American-grown wheat per year through Food for Peace. Much of that wheat has gone to support hunger hotspots in the Middle East and East Africa, where food insecurity still persists."

"Food for Peace is one of the most successful humanitarian programs because of the enduring commitment of America’s farmers, millers, port workers, longshoremen and merchant mariners to feeding the world," said William P. Campbell, vice president of operations, Liberty Maritime Corporation. "However, there are some out there who want to eliminate the contribution of America’s farmers and mariners to Food for Peace or end the program entirely. World hunger is at its peak as conflict persists and the traditional breadbasket of Ukraine is disrupted. Against this backdrop, America must stand up and fight hunger and once again be the shining beacon of hope for those around the world. Food for peace is that hope."

"America’s farmers feed the world and this shipment will feed one million people facing starvation for an entire year; focusing on families who need it most," said Washington Grain Commissioner Gary Bailey, a wheat grower in Whitman County. "Washington’s wheat farmers are proud to have connected America’s home-grown food to hungry families half a world away for 70 years and counting."

In remarks prepared for the ceremony, Marrone stated, "The Seafarers International Union proudly supports cargo preference and we strongly believe that the laws should be strengthened for the betterment of America’s national, economic and homeland security."

According to the latest data from the World Bank, across the Middle East and North Africa, one in five people are severely food insecure, including eight million children. Through Food for Peace, American farmers, millers, port workers, longshoremen and mariners sailing under the U.S. flag have played a critical role in the program to fight global food insecurity.

In conjunction with the Longview event, Congressional representatives and other stakeholders offered their support for Food for Peace’s mission.

Congresswoman Cathy McMorris Rodgers (R-Washington) - "Eastern Washington’s agricultural community has a rich history of feeding the world, especially those in need. Thanks to the Columbia-Snake River system, our wheat farmers are able to send their products to hungry nations around the world, preserving their hard-earned legacy and ensuring America continues to shine as a beacon of hope. Thank you to our farmers, industry stakeholders, and maritime partners who helped make this tremendous humanitarian effort possible."

Congresswoman PrAMILA JAYAPAD (D-Washington) - "The United States must continue to provide robust international aid to meet the scale of need in the fight against hunger. I am inspired by the partnership of the maritime labor, carriers, and agriculture sectors in Washington and across the country to make this monumental contribution to global food security."

Congressman Adam Smith (D-Washington) - "I commend partners throughout Washington State for their continued commitment to USAID’s Food for Peace Program. Food for Peace plays an integral role in alleviating hunger throughout the world while also strengthening the United States’ diplomatic efforts. Thank you to the many partners, including Washington State agricultural producers and union workers, who make these efforts possible."

Congresswoman Marilyn Strickland (D-Washington) - "Washington State has long been a leader in agricultural production and has put us in a position to create positive change. With eight billion dollars in agricultural exports last year and partnerships between public, private, trade groups, and labor, our state is well positioned to extend beyond our geographic boundaries and touch the lives of individuals and families facing hunger emergencies."

Jane Shey, Senior Policy Consultant, World Food Program USA - “Food security is national security. We must increase our collective efforts to access the funding and commodities needed to meet the challenge of a food-insecure world. Committed leadership on the part of the United States, from Capitol Hill to the docks where we stand today, is essential to securing a peaceful and prosperous future.”

Dan McKisson, President, Washington Area District Council of the International Longshore and Warehouse Union - “American-grown commodities, like the soft, white wheat loaded on the U.S.-flagged vessel Liberty Glory here today, have saved lives all over the world. This is a tangible symbol of our nation’s generosity, loading these cargos and sending them to those in need overseas, also provides much-needed living wage jobs for our union members and for their families.”

Randy Suehs, on behalf of the Washington Grain Commission and Washington Association of Wheat Growers - “Food aid not only benefits everyone around the world and American farmers, but it also involves everybody in the supply chain: the truckers, the warehousemen, the shippers and the longshoremen. Right now, one U.S. farmer feeds 166 others across the country and around the world. I am proud to be part of this program, working to achieve long-lasting and sustainable food security for the world.”

Merchant Marine Delivers Relief Cargoes in Hawaii

At press time for this edition of the LOG (mid-August), Seafarers and SIU-contracted vessel operators were involved in the relief efforts in Hawaii, following the wildfires that devastated parts of the state.

Accordingly, the union is herein relief voluntary donations via the Seafarers Disaster Aid Fund. More information about the fund is available on the SIU website (prominently linked on the home page).

No SIU members are known to have been injured or to have lost their homes as a result of the fires.

Seafarers-contracted Pasha Hawaii reported that its supply chain routes were fully operational as support efforts for Maui wildfire relief continue. The company has enacted its emergency response plan “which includes prioritizing emergency rations, foodstuffs and medical supplies via available barge capacity to Maui and its direct vessel roll-on/roll-off service,” Pasha said in a news release.

Additionally, Seafarers-contracted Matson reported that it had begun transporting emergency response equipment and supplies to Maui for the Federal Emergency Management Administration (FEMA) and the Hawaii Emergency Management Agency (HOME 스스로). In mid-August, the American Maritime Partnership, to which the SIU is a member, coordinated with county, state, federal, and local and federal authorities in Hawaii continue to respond to the needs of residents and the devastating impacts of several wildfires, which had taken more than 100 lives and destroyed more than 2,200 homes and businesses.

In what has been described as the deadliest wildfire incident in the U.S. in more than 100 years, the fires were exacerbated by extremely dry conditions and strong winds generated by the passage of Hurricane Dora.

According to AMP, as of Aug. 14, all 10 ports within Hawaii’s Commercial Harbor System, including Kahului Harbor Piers 1, 2 and 3 on the island of Maui, remained operational. The coalition also noted the following, in addition to reporting about the respective efforts of Pasha and Matson:

- Cargo from the mainland U.S. to Maui are generally routed through Honolulu and transshipped to Kahului, Maui (the main harbor), but there is also direct U.S. barge service and roll-on/roll-off vessel service from the mainland to Kahului.

- The American maritime industry is coordinating with county, state, federal, and emergency departments to prioritize and move cargo, and ensure safe and expedited delivery of disaster aid.

- U.S. flagged barges are arriving at Kahului Harbor in Maui to provide relief goods.

- A barge with 20 Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) containers arrived on Thursday, Aug. 10, carrying pallets of bottled water and ready-to-eat meals.

- Another barge arrived on Saturday, Aug. 12, carrying 191 containers with generators, emergency supplies, and other equipment to assist the community response efforts.

- The Hawaii Department of Transportation (HDOT) has waived all wharfage charges for cargoes inbound to Kahului Harbor since August 9, 2023.

- HDO will waive demurrage and storage fees and port entry and dockage for vessels displaced from small boat harbors in Maui, and have determined that the declared state of emergency is good cause for extensions of free time.

- The National Guard has activated 134 troops, including 99 Army National Guard personnel and 35 Air National Guard personnel, to assist in the ongoing local and federal wildfire response efforts.

- FEMA announced it had deployed more than 150 personnel, including search and rescue teams.

Meeting with Labor Secretary

SIU Assistant President Amancio Crespo recently earned an additional title.

In August, Crespo was elected president of the Puerto Rico Chapter of the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement (LCLAA) during the organization’s twenty-fourth convention in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Also elected as LCLAA officials were Vice President John Narvas (Asociacion de Mastros de Puerto Rico, or AMPR), Secretary-Treasurer Jose Ramirez (American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees or AFSCME), Leg Secretary Nadireschka Martinez (Secretary, AMPR), Board member Nelly Ayala (President, AMPR), Board Member Maria Ortiz (Teacher and Tech Support, AMPR), and Board Member Hector Reyes (International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, or IBEW). All members of the LCLAA-PR Chapter are also members of the executive Board of the Puerto Rico Workers Federation (Federacion de Trabajadores de Puerto Rico, or FTPR AFL-CIO).

During the convention, the new chapter electees adopted policy priorities and resolutions meant to ensure dignity for working families. They resolved to prioritize workplace initiatives for long-term economic stability, foster strength and success for LGBTQ workers, and build a bright future for the middle class. The resolutions also emphasize building power with immigrant workers, empowering women in the trades, ensuring quality beginnings to education, and advocating for workers’ rights in a global economy. The LCLAA plans to work toward instating workplace initiatives for long-term economic stability, advocating for affordable and accessible health care for all, and fighting for equal rights on the job and humanitarian protections for those in harm’s way, the organization reported.

The convention’s theme, “Together Toward Tomorrow: Trabajadores para un Futuro Justo,” focused on improving the quality of life of all Latin Americans in the U.S. and enriching the benefits necessary to achieve happiness, good living, and the peace to which all Americans are entitled according to our Constitution and Civil Rights. It commenced with a chapter president’s meeting, during which Crespo and the other new chapter members from Milwaukee, Greater Boston, Puerto Rico, and South Central Arizona were welcomed. Stephanie Sempolinski offered insights on citizenship clinics, while Lucas Gonzalez led a workshop on voter education and partnering with other organizations for effective voting efforts. With inspiring speeches and discussions by esteemed speakers including AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurer Fred Redmond and American Federation of Teachers President Randi Weingarten, the session set the stage for a dynamic and transformative convention experience, according to attendees.

During the plenary session, Randi Weingarten and Weingarten effusively exalted the Jones Act in their respective speeches. They referenced Crespo’s effective work promoting the law, and the way they emphasized how necessary and vital that statue is for Puerto Rico’s economy. Speakers also mentioned what this means for U.S. national security, especially in cases of national emergency like the major, devastating hurricanes and earthquakes that have hit Puerto Rico in the past five years. Both Redmond and Weingarten were received and dismissed with standing ovations.

The newest class of recertified stewards graduated in August, and the group had plenty of good things to say about the experience.

SIU members completing the top-level course at the union-affiliated Paul Hall Center for Maritime Training and Education (PHC) were: Bernard Butts, Natalie Delgado, Dennison Dixon, Ingra Maddox, Annie T. Nodd, Erwin Renon, J.D. Reyes, Jermaine Robinson and Dennison Dizon. They formally completed the class during the August membership meeting in Piney Point, Maryland.

During their training, the stewards were instructed and tested on a variety of subjects, including leadership, baking ability, computer skills, social responsibilities, Coast Guard updates, and other department-specific workshops on healthy eating, safe work areas and more. During the two-week course, each member also gained new and additional insight into the functions of the various departments of the SIU as well as the Seafarers Plans, collective bargaining agreements, and the union’s affiliations with both the Maritime Trades Department and its parent organization, the AFL-CIO.

As part of the graduation ceremony, each steward spoke to the assembled crowd of SIU officials, members and guests before receiving their certificates of completion. In each speech, the new recertified stewards described their experiences with the course, their careers as mariners and their time spent at the PHC. Without exception, each member of the class praised the curriculum, the staff and faculty of the school and the importance of upgrading and furthering their careers. Following are highlights of the respective graduation speeches.

Bernard Butts

Unable to attend the graduation ceremony in person, Butts nevertheless thanked the union’s executive board, staff and faculty for their assistance and instruction throughout the course. The Norfolk, Virginia-based mariner wrote, “I would like to thank the president, vice-presidents, officials, patrolmen, chefs, instructors, my fellow recertified stewards and all the stewards that came before me that imparted wisdom, knowledge and guidance to help me reach this point in my career.”

He continued, “It is an honor to stand before you as a new recertified steward.

I began my career as a mariner in 2001, after 12 years in the Navy. I embarked on my first ship, the USNS Bold, beginning what has become a prosperous and fulfilling career path in the SIU.

“Since I joined the union, my life has excelled in many different ways. I have been able to provide the life for my family that I had always dreamed of. I have been able to see many different parts of the world that some only dream or imagine. I have been able to teach and mentor many along the way, sharing work knowledge, life lessons and insight into this great entity we call the SIU.”

He concluded by offering advice to the apprentices and upgraders: “Continue to strive to become greater. Never limit yourself. Always press to take your career to the next level. Keep your head down, mouth closed and ears open. There is an opportunity in the SIU that you can’t find in a lot of places, called upgrading! Take full advantage of this opportunity, and don’t get stagnant or complacent in your current position.”

Ingra Maddox

Shipping from the Port of Tacoma, Washington, Maddox spoke about her career, as well as her family connection to the SIU. After thanking the officials seated on the dais, she reflected on her experiences in the program.

“First, I’d like to say how honored I am to be here with my fellow recertified stewards, and humbly thank all of our great instructors, including Natalie (Delgado, who previously taught at the PHC during her shore time), for all they’ve done over the years to help me get to where I am today. I never could have imagined I’d be here.

“My family has been a part of the SIU for 45 years,” Maddox continued. “I’ve been sailing for 20. Being a mariner has enriched my life in so many ways, but most importantly, by giving me the financial freedom to help in providing for my family. The long vacations don’t hurt, either.”

To the apprentices, she said, “Please don’t waste the opportunity you’ve been given. Apply yourself, learn all you can and take full advantage of all our school has to offer. The school is here to help us all. When you get out on the ships, listen, learn and ask questions. The only stupid questions are ones not asked. Remember that we all had to start at the bottom.

Finally, he offered the following advice to future mariners: “At sea, there is no such thing as half-hearted. That comes back to bite you, and gets you hurt. We want to see you back to your loved ones in one piece.”

Jermaine Robinson

Next to speak was Robinson, who sails out of the Port of New Orleans. He detailed his career, starting with his first job in the industry.

“I’ve been sailing with the SIU now for 26 years and five months. I took my first job on February 27, 1997, with the Delta Queen Steamboat Company. From there, my journey continued as I moved on to bigger deep sea vessels, where in 2004 I got a job aboard the USNS Al-tair... Aboard that ship I was able to go completely around the world, where I got my chance to cross the Equator.”

He thanked the union officials and the staff at the PHC, as well as talked about his family: “The SIU has been financially good to my family and me over the years. My wife and I have four kids and two grandkids, and my baby boy is about to graduate high school.” He then thanked the union for helping enable him to send all of his children to college.

He also mentioned some of the skills he learned during the course, before turning to address the apprentices in the auditorium, saying, “Come aboard, work hard, listen to your supervisors, work alongside your fellow shipmates, learn as much as you can, don’t be afraid to ask questions and always remember to never stop there. Always come back and upgrade, upgrade, upgrade.”

J.D. Reyes

Sailing out of Tacoma, Reyes is another legacy mariner in this class, who followed his mother’s path to a career at sea: “I became a mariner in the year 2000, in New York, because my family’s history in the U.S. also began in New York. My mother was a sailor for more than 25 years, with the National Maritime Union,” he recalled.

Reyes continued, “The most important part of being a mariner is to love what you are doing. If I wasn’t proud to be here, I wouldn’t still be sailing.” He then spoke about the importance of supporting the Seafarers Political Activities Donation (SPAD), the union’s voluntary political action fund.

Finally, he offered the following advice to future mariners: “At sea, there is no such thing as half-hearted. That comes back to bite you, and gets you hurt. We want to see you back to your loved ones in one piece.”

Dennison Dizon

Dizon, hailing from the Port of Wilmington, California, was next to address the crowd, saying, “I am honored to be at this level in my career. It’s a dream come true to be a recertified steward. I became a merchant mariner because of my father, Bosun Dante Dizon. I joined the SIU and started sailing in 2009, and now I’m the permanent steward of the USNS Red Cloud.

“The SIU provides a quality lifestyle, and I am evidence of that,” he continued, "...Continues on next page..."
“The SIU has helped me a lot, especially when it comes to supporting my family. It gives us a high standard of living, and financial security through our future.”

He then offered advice to the trainees, saying, “Take advantage of the opportunity that you have right now, study hard while you’re here and learn as much as you can. Remember, ‘Talent wins games, but teamwork and hard work wins championships.’ Upgrading is a must, never settle for less than what you deserve, and you can’t be afraid to fail, because that’s the only way to succeed.

He also credited the union officials and staff of the PHC, before thanking his wife, who was in attendance: “She is the reason why I am here. She motivated me every single day. She’s my inspiration. I love you, and this is for you!”

Annie T. Nodd
After thanking the officials, Nodd talked about her history with the SIU. She hails from Mobile, Alabama.

“I started as a trainee in the apprentice program – Class 563 – and that gave me the right amount of discipline that I needed, and the skills that I still use today,” she said. “I’m so grateful to God for guiding me in this direction. Without God’s guidance, I don’t know where I would be.

“The SIU has given me a sense of stability and security,” she continued. “It has allowed me to travel the world and to continue to work and support my family, even when everything had shut down (during the COVID-19 pandemic). I am so grateful for that!”

She also mentioned the importance of assisting young mariners, saying, “I had some great mentors, some old-timers who took me under their wing and taught me all they knew. To the trainees, I was once sitting where you all are now. The training and knowledge you all will learn here will take you throughout your career, if you apply it. Listen to your instructors and work hard. This school is not set up to fail you. If you fail, that’s on you.”

She concluded by thanking the staff and instructors, saying, “Everyone here has always made me feel at home and safe. I grew up under you all, and I thank you all for hosting this year’s steward re-certification class.”

Erwin Renon
Renon began with the most important recognition, saying, “It is my distinct honor to be here, but, first and foremost, I would like to thank my wife, who has stood with me all these years. I thank her, God, and my four beautiful daughters for helping me to be here today.”

He quipped, “I have been a mariner for 23 years, longer than most of you have been alive.” He then spoke about his history with the union, saying, “I fell in love with my new career, and met so many wonderful people along the way. The union has become an important part of my family’s life. Without the support of the union, I would not have been able to provide for my family as well as I can, and I am forever grateful to the SIU for that.”

He took a moment to thank the staff of his home port, Tacoma, before speaking to the trainees: “All of us can agree that the road ahead is not going to be easy, but do try to do your best and take every opportunity that you are given. Your time here will teach you many skills, and connect you to many people. Payday is coming for you.”

He concluded by urging his fellow mariners to contribute to SPAD, and by thanking the staff and instructors at the PHC.

Natalie Delgado
Last to speak, Delgado ships out of Wilmington, and has a long history with the union. Beyond her sailing career of more than 20 years, she also worked part-time at the PHC as an instructor for many years.

“Prior to joining the union, I found myself struggling to stay above water financially,” she began. “I was working two full-time jobs… Shortly after AHC went out of business, I got a call from a Navy captain, saying I came highly recommended. For the last 17 years, I’ve been loyal to the USNS Loyal as the permanent chief steward.”

She added, “I consider myself truly blessed to have had the privilege of working with the chefs here at Pinney Point: John Hetmanski, John Dobson, Paulie Gelrud, R.J. Johnson, and my mentor who took me under his wing. Ed White, God bless his soul. Gentlemen, from the bottom of my heart, I thank you.”

Delgado stated, “Thank you to my husband, Edwin, for holding down the hatches while I was at sea.” She then urged those in attendance to support SPAD, as well as backing politicians who support the Jones Act, and getting out to the polls to vote.

She concluded, “To the trainees, don’t be the one who years from now says, ‘shoulda, woulda, coulda’ or wonder where you would be in life if you had just committed to this industry. Joining the SIU and becoming a mariner changed my life.”

BOSUN CREDITS ABs – Many thanks to Recertified Bosun Lee Hardman for this snapshot of SJ Joe Horton, AB Paul Jimenez and AB Levi Gorokhovsky aboard the Global Sentinel (SubCom). Photo was taken during a recent trip from the West Coast to the UK. Hardman said it “was a long trip but time to catch up on some maintenance. They knocked it out of the park chipping the lifeboat davits.” All are graduates of the apprentice program who recently secured their respective AB tickets.

At Sea and Ashore with the SIU
The location and exterior bricks are quite familiar, but the rest of the hiring hall in Norfolk, Virginia, is essentially brand new, following a successful, months-long renovation.

SIU members, retirees, family members and guests joined union officials July 25 for a ceremonial reopening of the facility, located at 115 Third Street. The union has operated from that spot since 1963, though it maintained temporary offices in nearby Chesapeake, Virginia, since late summer 2022, due to the refurbishment.

As with any renovation of such extensive scope, this one included some figurative speed bumps, but the finished product elicited nothing but praise.

Bosun Darnell Bates stated, “No joke, this looks really nice. It’s gorgeous, and I really like the desk area.”

“It’s up to the times for the new generation coming in,” said Chief Steward Reynard Gibbs. “I think it’ll definitely bring a positive energy. The map of southeast Hampton Roads (behind the counter) is cool and the Wi-Fi works. I just logged in.”

Guzel Blake Thrasher said, “Everything looks a whole lot better. It’s clean and more modern. The front desk is more organized and the hall has better spacing.”

Retired Recertified Bosun Audrey Davis noted, “The improvements make you feel good. I think it’s absolutely wonderful and beautiful.”

The ceremony, which was followed by a catered luncheon, included remarks from (in chronological order) SIU Secretary-Treasurer Tom Orzechowski, SIU Norfolk Port Agent Mario Torrey, SIU Assistant Vice President Pat Vandegrift (who oversaw the renovation), Seafarers Trustee Tony Naccarato, Virginia Delegate Jeion Ward, and SIU President David Heindel. Attendees then gathered outside the building, where retired SIU Vice President Kermett Mangram, long a mainstay in Norfolk, cut the ceremonial ribbon following a blessing from local Pastor O.L. Cromwell.

Moments before the program started, Seafarers-contracted Maersk Line, Limited (which is headquartered in Norfolk) presented a new, glass-encased model of the Maersk Peary, unveiled by company Vice President Ed Hanley.

Heindel commended Vandegrift’s work in overseeing the renovation, which included completely replacing most or all of the plumbing and drainage systems, electrical components, flooring and ceilings, windows, offices, counter and more.

“The building started to show its age,” Heindel said. “We invested in our membership to make sure you had a comfortable place. It was time.

Pat did an excellent job,” he continued. “He dedicated more than a year to get this project to conclusions. It wasn’t easy, but Pat has the tenacity to keep things on track and he did a hell of a job.”

Heindel said the refurbished hall “symbolizes improvements in the present and the hope for the future. This location is excellent, and now this facility itself is state of the art and will serve our membership well into the future. It’s a place where our members and their families can feel safe and proud to come and take care of their business.”

He concluded by telling the crowd that plans are being made to improve a few more of the hiring halls in the near future.

Naccarato, who has worked in the maritime industry for 58 years, said the hall is “a beautiful building – a building that will not only serve to provide good jobs to members, but a building that will be a testament to the excellent and valuable labor-management relationships that owners and operators enjoy with the SIU. Buildings of this quality do not happen without vision and determination.”

He also thanked the rank-and-file members “for your service and for your willingness to sacrifice time away from family and friends. You serve a very vital role. Being a seafarer is not an easy life. Please rest assured that you are truly appreciated not only for providing a decent living standard for yourself and for your families, but also for your valuable contribution to our shipping companies and to the defense and security of our country. Your participation and support absolutely are indispensable, now more than ever in a very dangerous and uncertain world.”

In addition to his position as a state delegate, Ward is president of an American Federation of Teachers local and serves on the Virginia AFL-CIO Executive Council, where she spearheads the labor movement’s support in the general assembly.

She complimented the new-look hall and also said, “If you tell me labor wants it, I’m going to fight for it… When labor speaks, I listen.”

Orzechowski opened the festivities and stated, “We couldn’t be more pleased with the product and we really believe that this building is going to serve the SIU membership well in the next several decades.”

He also thanked Vandegrift, as did Torrey. The port agent added, “I can truly say it’s good to be back home. We’ve got the best of all worlds. We have the same great location, a beautiful building, and decades of history. No one knows more about these upgrades than Pat Vandegrift, who’s been in charge of this operation since day one. He’s worked tirelessly.”

Vandegrift mentioned that he already was familiar with the area, partly because of family, partly because of his time in the Navy.

The hall “stood the test of time, but it needed an upgrade,” he said. “It needed a yard period. We got a great product in the end, and I’m honored to serve all of you.”

One of the guests, American Maritime Officers Secretary-Treasurer Bob Rice – who sailed with the SIU for a dozen years – hit the deck and recalled getting his start at the Norfolk hall.

“Spring of 1990, I walked through that very door right there,” he said.

Rice added that when he subsequently went to the union-affiliated school in Piney Point, Maryland, “I learned some of the best life lessons that I’ve ever learned. Hard work wins. You get out of life what you put into it. No matter how good you are, or how hard you work, bad things are going to happen to you. How you address those things largely will determine your character… I just wanted to say how grateful I am to the SIU. It’s made me the man I am today.”

Benefits Conferences Continue

Representatives from the SIU and the Seafarers Plans are conducting a series of benefits conferences at various hiring halls (the first took place in July). Seafarers, retirees and their families are strongly encouraged to attend at least one of the gatherings. Most of the conferences will take place the same days as the respective membership meetings for the given months.

Designed to educate rank-and-file members as well as union employees, the conferences focus on various Seafarers Plans. Conference goals include making enrollees aware of benefits available to them under each plan. Special emphasis is placed on points that plan participants may not know about.

There may be an exception or two, but each staff conference takes place ahead of the membership meeting, and is followed by a separate conference for members, dependents and retirees immediately after the membership meeting.

This month’s question was answered by members and one pensioner in Piney Point, Maryland.

Question: What are some things you like(d) about your job?

Frank Messick
Pensioner (Sailed AB)
I liked the travel. The pay was great and the education was fantastic. The brotherhood is another great thing. You see a lot of places you’d never even thought of. The friendships you get with your fellow union members.

Roslyn Anderson
Chief Cook
I like cooking and I like the people, my fellow crew members. Being able to cook with international products and experience different cultures – I love that.

Julian Abreu
Chief Cook
Exploration and adventure. I would also say situations you don’t always run into, like making a barbecue for a lot of people on the ship. Keeping the customers happy, things like that. I actually enjoy that a lot.

Michael messick
Electrician
Traveling and working six months a year. The money is good, and you see new people all the time. I enjoy it. I’ve been with the union 20 years.

Michael Papaioannou
Chief Steward
I get to interact with people from different cultural backgrounds and also get to play with food. I’ve been sailing since 2001 and have been with the union since 2014.

Michael Jacob Caquias
Chief Cook
It covers three things I like to do: I’m passionate about the sea, I love cooking, and I love providing the best for my daughter. With this job, I do all three with one shot.

Julian Abreu
Chief Cook
Exploration and adventure. I would also say situations you don’t always run into, like making a barbecue for a lot of people on the ship. Keeping the customers happy, things like that. I actually enjoy that a lot.

Michael Papaioannou

Paul Hall Center, Union Host Military Sealift Command Officials

The SIU and its affiliated Paul Hall Center for Maritime Training and Education in late July hosted a quarterly labor-management meeting at the school that also included personnel from the U.S. Military Sealift Command (MSC), the MM&P and the MEBA. Attendees covered a wide range of topics pertaining to federal-sector mariners. Following the meeting, they toured the campus in Piney Point, Maryland. Among those pictured in the posed photo (right to left, starting at far right) are SIU Representative Sam Spain, SIU Counsel Jon Madden, SIU VP Government Services Nicholas Celona and (far left) SIU Asst. VP Joe Vincenzo.

Members Approve Changes to 4 Ports

During the August membership meetings, votes were taken at all of the union’s constitutional ports on a matter proposed by SIU President Dave Heindel and unanimously approved by the SIU Executive Board to change the status of four informational port facilities: the halls in Norfolk, Virginia; Jacksonville, Florida; Wilmington, California; and Tacoma, Washington.

A majority of the voting membership concurred and, as a result, effective October 1, 2023, the port offices in Norfolk, Jacksonville, Wilmington and Tacoma will all be classified as constitutional ports – meaning that official actions can be taken at the meetings in those ports, along with all other constitutional ports, starting with the October membership meetings.

Students Helping Students

Greetings from the USNS Mary Sears

Many thanks to AMO member Ed McDonnell for these snapshots from the USNS Mary Sears (Ocean Shipholdings). The group photo was taken in Sydney, Australia. SIU members in the various photos include Recertified Bosun Joe Gierbolini, ABs Julian Lin, Mark Bolitho and Toby Blunt, OS Mohamed Saleh, QMEDs Mackenzie Latta, Peter Solis and Russ Bravin, Storekeeper Ana Calma, GVA Chris Gonse and SA Surait Kajuna. Ed also offered special kudos to Gierbolini, who “is above and beyond. He’s super safety-conscious and always taking care of everyone. Amazing guy and has his kids following him into the industry.”
